Workshop: From Classroom to Career: Building Skills for Criminal Justice and Social Service Professions

Barbara Gradala, Independent Facilitator
Kimberly Kras, San Diego State University

This workshop helps students connect academic experiences to meaningful career opportunities in criminal justice and social service by identifying personal values, translating scholarly abilities into practical workplace skills, and communicating those strengths effectively. Participants complete a brief values self-assessment, discuss career priorities, and explore positions aligned with their goals. Guided exercises help students recognize transferable skills and develop a concise professional marketing message, with opportunities for peer feedback. The workshop also introduces essential résumé-building strategies, including using active verbs, crafting a professional summary, tailoring materials to specific job descriptions, and presenting academic experiences in language that resonates with prospective employers across diverse professional settings.

Workshop: You Got the Job – Now What? Setting Priorities in Your First Year (or Two) in Academia

Andrea Giuffre, California State University, San Bernardino
Sishi Wu, California State University, San Bernardino

Securing a faculty position is an important achievement, but the transition into academic employment introduces new challenges involving finances, research, teaching, service, and work-life balance. This interactive workshop focuses on helping graduate students, postdoctoral scholars, and early-career faculty develop a realistic and sustainable plan for their first year (or two) in criminology and criminal justice. The workshop centers on three practical questions: What financial decisions should I prioritize? How can I establish a focused and manageable research agenda? How can I balance teaching, service, and personal well-being? Through brief presentations, guided reflection, and small-group discussion, participants will identify their most important early career priorities and anticipate common obstacles. They will then develop a 90-day action plan that includes specific goals, anticipated challenges, and strategies for maintaining sustainable work habits.
